

$1,611, this pattern continues until the low income intersects with the regular table. This intersection occurs at higher income levels as the number of children increase. For example, the one-child amount intersects at 1,951 and the six children amount intersects at 2,451.

The committee had a unanimous vote in support of the above-stated proposal and agreed that, while it is not a perfect proposal, it attempts to strike a balance between the non-custodial parent's subsistence needs and the needs of the children they are obligated to support. It also meets new federal requirements implemented on December 20, 2016. The committee discussed at length the needs of the custodial parent and the children. The latter two groups' needs were at the forefront of the committee's discussions as their needs do not change just because the non-custodial parent has limited means.

The committee chairs and members wish to thank the legislative body for consideration of this report and welcome the opportunity to respond to any questions or concerns they might have with the proposal.

Sincerely,

Lori Nelson & Russell Minas
